LINCOLN DAVIS

GEORGE ARTHUR GRAY

HOWARD ATHERTON CUTLER

Class Secretary

EDWARD KENNARD RAND

To the Class of 1894:

This, classmates, is not strictly a report. It is a compromise between a report and an address list: the former is not needed so soon after the publication of the last one in 1902, while the latter is serviceable at any instant—so rapid are our movements, so pervasive the progress of '94 through the various quarters of the globe. Still, as I have included more than mere addresses here, I give this little volume the benefit of a doubt, and call it a report. A similar publication, if all goes well, will be issued two years from now, and a real report will appear on the occasion of our fifteenth anniversary. Contributors to the present book will find their communications ruthlessly cut: I have reduced all items to the bare basis of fact. Many interesting observations thus perish by the way; instance Louis Hall's remark that the Pike makes the Midway seem a mere farce, or Short's assertion that he has captured the Queen of the Blue Grass(but contra, see Third Report, p. 94, Par. 3). Other scintillations of equal note, I have been forced by the purpose of the present undertaking to extinguish.

Since the publication of the last report, there have died, all in the year 1902:

Roger Trowbridge Atkinson.

James Hudson Bell.

Marshall Holbrooke.

Daniel Joseph Mulqueeney.

Edward Augustus Perkins.

Notices of these men will appear in the report five years from now.

The number of married men in the class has now mounted considerably above the 200 mark, showing a gratifying average of sanity. I have tried several times to count the offspring, and after successive failures am convinced that while '94 may not approve of what has recently been defined as "the rabbit theory of civilization," the day of class suicide is still distant.

Yes, we are a growing class—and in the best sense of all. Our fellow-feeling is growing and strengthening year by year. The sacrifice of money and time on the part of those who come on for this celebration, the instantaneous and generous response to the appeals of the Decennial Committee, shows that we recognize the value of that sentiment which binds a class together. Best wishes to all for our Decennial.

EDWARD KENNARD RAND.
